The crosses are missing from the crowns and the mint letters have been rendered as two triangles. Even the date is barbarous, which would lead one to believe that the engraver was either completely illiterate (not just illiterate in Russian) or wanted the date to be deliberately obscure. That being said, the weight is within overall range, while the edging is well done. A highly illustrative example of a profiteer’s contemporary Pyatak copy

This magnificent piece was issued as an Award Medal for the Archipelago Expedition of 1769-1770 during the Russo-Turkish War of 1768-1774. Count Orlov had entered the Mediterranean to destroy the Ottoman fleet and encourage rebellion among the Greeks in the Morea. The Russian victory at Cheshmé was decisive, with the Ottoman fleet burned. Following further setbacks on the Danube, the Sublime Porte was forced to sign the Treaty of Küçük Kâinârji (1774), concluding the war. Gold and Silver Medals were presented to high-ranking officers and participants in the Battle of Cheshmé. Meanwhile, during the anniversary celebrations of June 24, 1771 marking the naval victory, all attendees were presented with medals honoring Count Orlov, presumably nearly all Bronze.

Portrait of Reichel  $\frac{3}{4}$  left, signed below, Latin legend around / Reichel Family Arms, banner around with legend and Roman numeral date. Rare. Toned. Good very fine \$ 5,000

The illustrious Jacob J. Reichel (1760-1856) designed the Constantine Rouble, and the 1827 and 1845 Pattern Rouble and Poltina along with hundreds of other coins and medals. Medalist, designer and engraver at the St. Petersburg mint from 1802-1845, Reichel was both very accomplished and very successful. He served as Councilor of State, and was the recipient of the Order of St. Stanislaus First Class, the Order of St. Anna First Class and other high honors. In the 1820s, Reichel began collecting Russian and European coins and medals. He rose to be an eminent numismatist, while his collection garnered widespread fame thanks to the 9 volume catalog of his collection that Reichel published.

When the new Hermitage opened in 1851, the Money Cabinet already boasted Reichel's collection of Russian coins and medals (4,712 pieces), purchased by Tsar Nicholas I. The Hermitage purchased the balance of Reichel's collection – 41,875 European coins and medals and Oriental and Ancient coins, from his heirs, 1856-1857.
